The Goldfish Bowl

Thought wanders
unconfined
peaceful
over the white page
but once
it was not so.
When I was little
I saw the world
from behind glass
and thought lived detached
in the goldfish bowl
of my mind.
When I grew bigger
I discovered Plato
and learnt about Shadows and Forms and things not being real and so I settled
for the idea that the goldfish bowl was the way things were.
Then one day
I stood in a church and watched rays of sunlight melting through the soft rich colours
of stained glass
and falling in pools of glowing red and orange on tombs
in the stoneflagged floor.
And I knew there was something behind the glass trying to get through and that it was love
The love was pouring
through the window
onto the tombs
but the glass was in between.
Later I found
what Plato never knew that the love is God
that love is life
and that the life
is mine
and I swam out of the goldfish bowl.

© Alison Morgan
www.alisonmorgan.co.uk
Photo ©Microsoft